Subject: Letter of Application for Analytics Engineer at ACEN

Dear Ms. Charleen, Ms. Hannah, and Sir JC

I write this to reiterate my heartfelt and deeply genuine interest to be part of ACEN's Analytics team. Having long sought, and for a while now, work in a Data Engineering/Analytics role, ever since being an undergrad and now as a graduate, I've to the best of my ability always proactively built the projects I must to prepare for such a role, to religiously understand the concepts that underly it, writing about it on social media on what I've learned that others can learn too, and to finally test my mettle by offering my expertise through applications at numerous companies.

But in all honestly having read and learned about ACEN's commitment to a more sustainable environment, to being on track to keeping on generating 100% renewable energy, to make accessible clean, reliable, and affordable energy for our fellow Filipino citizens, and to aspire specifically for 0% greenhouse emissions by 2050, I was nothing short of inspired, and in awe reading about the remarkable aspirations and achievements ACEN has already made in our time.

For a period, of time I saw technical skills and being adept them while also understanding business and business acumen as the only things that mattered in one's job search. But reading numerous companies' visions, aspirations, and their advocacies those including ACENs, I realized that knowing their visions, advocacies, aspirations and whether it aligns with your own was I think just as important of a trait. And the cause of a sustainable future and environment has been nothing short of inspiring to me, and for lack of a better word "nangagarap ako" – I too dreamt before knowing of ACEN for a sustainable future and a world worth living in for future generations. And perhaps like many of you if given the chance, I too can effect positive change and contribute in my own small way to a cause like that of ACEN that truly matters.

This is because I believe that while skills and understanding business are important I believe what's even paramount more so is ones drive, fire, willingness, which I believe everyone ultimately aspires to, to make an impact in the world, contribute, and give value, to an organization they believe in and to a cause again that truly matters, one that nature truly intends, which ACEN continuous to strive towards.

While I have no doubt there is no shortage of qualified applicants that may apply a role like this: above all else like my skills and my understanding business acumen, my drive of working towards a greener tomorrow using my capabilities apart from the aforementioned skills, is what I think truly separates me from the rest. And it is but a mere dream that fuels my drive to do so. So, my heartfelt respect to your organization for continuously striving towards this dream as well. And most of all a heartfelt thank you for reading this my piece and letter to your organization ACEN.

Sincerely,

Larry
